

INDEXES TO STATE OF MICHIGAN DOCUMENTS

By Le Roy Barnett
July, 2009

Not too long ago, I was talking with a Michigan history professor about the dearth of research into our state's past by graduate college students. He said that, in his opinion, this reluctance by scholars to investigate and write about the bygones of our two peninsulas is attributable (at least in part) to a scarcity of available pathfinders to the needed information. The professor felt that if more access tools existed to the records required by academics wishing to study former times in Michigan, more articles and books would be produced on the subject.

As someone once employed as a reference person, I certainly share the professor's appreciation of, and desire for, more historical finding aids. Without the existence of convenient records locators, all but the most determined individuals will be discouraged from undertaking scholarship in a field of inquiry to which there is poor intellectual control. What was needed in this case, I felt, was an inventory of the indexes that exist to state government records as a means of stimulating research into Michigan's yesterdays. The following list is a product of that notion, covering those published and manuscript keys that grant convenient entry to Michigan's primary and secondary official state public documents.

In a desire to be comprehensive, this undertaking has defined a Michigan document to be any informational product—published, unpublished, or electronic—that has been generated by state government or created by others to facilitate access to such communications. Since the various agencies in Lansing have long been, collectively, the largest producers of raw and printed material in the state, it is not surprising that the number of facilitating gateways to these records are quite numerous. These entree resources have here been cataloged, divided into twenty-three alphabetically-arranged categories, and listed below in the following order: Agriculture; Biography; Business & Labor; Census (state censuses only, no federal enumerations); Corrections; Education; General; Geology; Governor's Office; Health; Highways; History; Immigration; Lands; Law; Maps; Military; Natural Resources; Professions; Railroads; Social Services; Vital Records; and Wildlife. Nearly everything cited can be found in Lansing at the Library of Michigan and/or the Archives of Michigan.

In concluding this introduction, it should be emphasized that this compilation does not include indexes to Michigan records created by the United States government. For example, beyond the purview of this catalog are useful federal reference tools relating to our state like Index Cards to Naturalization Petitions for the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan, Southern Division, Detroit, 1907-1995 (National Archives, 2004); [Index (Soundex) to the Population Schedules of the 14th Census of the United States, 1920, Michigan] (National Archives, 1992); or Michigan: Index to Topographic and Other Map Coverage Published and Distributed by the United States Geological Survey National Mapping Program (U.S. Geological Survey, 1991).

General:

"Answer: The Library of Michigan's Online Catalog." Lansing: Department of History, Arts & Libraries, [1987-present]. The main repository for printed Michigan government documents is the Library of Michigan. This is the search engine to the Library's holdings, which allows access by author, title, date, call number, material type, language, and keyword. Obsolete printed inventories of holdings can be found in various editions of the "Catalogue of the Michigan State Library," which first appeared in 1850 and were published for decades thereafter. A separate listing was made for legal volumes under the 1896 title, "Catalogue of the Michigan State Library Law Department." From time-to-time special lists have been prepared by the State Library for the benefit of researchers, such as the 1906 "Finding List of Works on Genealogy and American Local History in Michigan State Library."
